The Forgetting Pill

Sgt Deltsee announced: "This flag stands for glory…and irony.” Intellectuals make the worst Marines, but he led Ducky and the others terrifically during that whole bloody day when they retook the Post Office and Media Center from the Rebels.

The pill sits on the hall table, next to the baseball cap depicting it quite enlarged in its green with glowing orange specks.
It will buzz when it must be taken.

It does, and he allows it to dissolve in his mouth according to its own little program.

Then dons the cap and goes out to the limo to take him to the premiere.

On his way to his “Whirling-Seat,” applause for him.
He tips the cap. Norley Cartson, in the role of Sgt Deltsee roars "This flag stands for glory!" and the film begins.

Of course, Ducky remembers neither Sgt nor accurate utterance.

He becomes aware, though, of nonstop action and death,
while insanely spinning.

Romper Al portrays him as bluff and coarse and murderous.
No matter the pill, Ducky knows he’s none of these things.
